"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE"

Novelized By Frederick R. Toombs.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Assn.

From the Great Play by Paul Armstrong.

CHAPTER V.

AS his secretary left the room to procure Valentine Warden Handler glowered darkly at the door that closed behind him and through which No. 1289 was to be unwilingly brought. He would show this man who had dared to talk to the lieutenant governor that Billy Handler was the boss of Sing Sing prison and no one else, even lieutenant governors to the contrary. Discipline must be preserved. Yes, that was it—the old explanation that always held good when a prisoner who offended the warden in any way was meted out the vengeance that the warden would not be denied. Once there was a thin chested, cough racked little election inspector "doing three" for crooked work at the polls who had had his front teeth kicked down his throat because he would not shine the warden's shoes. As for this sick Mr. Valentine, he was altogether too independent, too, and the warden would give him the lesson of his life. He would—

The door opened, and in came Smith, holding Jimmy Valentine by the arm. The warden stood at his desk. "Bring him over here!" he cried hoarsely, pointing to the space in front of his desk.

The secretary slipped his hand up behind the prisoner's neck and with a violent heave flung Valentine forward so that he was barely able to prevent himself from falling flat on his face. Gritting his teeth, No. 1289 straightened himself and finally succeeded in

"CAN YOU TELL ME WHERE?" SHE ASKED, suppressing the impulse that surged within him to spring at his cowardly assailant's throat. Probably it was the realization of the fact that he knew himself to be more than an equal for Smith in a hand to hand conflict that enabled him to restrain himself—the contempt of a strong, confident man for an ignoble inferior. Smith was larger and heavier, yes, but the man who had hip locked the burglar Cotton and had thrown him headlong to his death from the window of a rushing railway train was not one to be trifled with. Besides, no less a personage than George Bothner, the world's lightweight wrestling champion had taught Valentine the mysteries of the "grappling," the "cross buttock," the "cornwall heave," the "flying mare," the "back heel," the rib crushing "scissors," the waist and crotch holds and even the tortures of the deadly strangle holds, front and rear.

Handler bent over his desk, resting both his hands upon it, and sneered at Valentine.

"Why didn't you smash him when he hit you, you coward?" he asked the helpless prisoner in purposely aggravating tones. "You're losing your nerve in this little boarding house of mine; that's what's the matter with you. You haven't any manhood left in you. And, say, Valentine, when we have had you here as our guest two years more you'll be whining around like a puppy with the pink eye; that's what you're coming to. It's bound to get you—this life—just like it gets all the rest of you thin skinned guys. Only a bum can live this life and keep his mind and his manhood."

The cruel words of the warden sank deeply into Valentine's soul, as Handler well knew they would. But the prisoner was determined that he would show no signs of weakening before the two men who hated him.

"I didn't hit him because I'll square myself when I get out," answered Valentine defiantly, "and there are a few little things that I will square with you, too, Mr. Warden Handler. You know you have me in your power, and so do I. But, Handler, you're going to like me better from now on because, realizing my position, I have dared go against you."

But Valentine had mistaken his man. The respect that one fighting man has for another who fights him squarely found no place in the craven heart of Billy Handler. Valentine had yet something to learn of the psychology of jail wardens. Handler's face took on a malignant expression. "Oh," he sneered, "so I'm going to like you, am I? Well, just watch me. I'll burke you, you!"

Handler lunged around the corner of his desk at the prisoner. "Don't burke me!" cried Valentine desperately.

Eyes gleaming with his vengefulness, with hands outstretched, the warden came headlong at Valentine, who braced himself to withstand the shock of the oncoming body. Crouching, the prisoner primed himself to clutch one of the warden's thumbs, which was carelessly extended outward from his hand—a trick Bothner had shown him. Once securing this thumb, it could be pulled back or twisted to the breaking point if necessary to cause an opponent to yield, or by drawing the outstretched arm over his shoulder, wheeling his back to his foe as he did so, Valentine could bend sharply forward and throw his assailant helplessly over his head and on to the floor in a heap with the disconcerting "flying mare."

But midway in his rush the warden stopped short. He had caught himself just in time. About to throw himself blindly at his intended victim, a thought (an inspiration he afterward considered it to be) flashed through his brain. The warden baited, much to the amazement of his secretary, Smith, who had been watching the proceedings with unconcern born of experience in like happenings. Then Handler turned away, rested one hand on his desk and with the other stroked his heavy, square chin reflectively.

"God," he pondered. "Suppose the lieutenant governor should get on to those deals in the contracts for supplies? He might, and then I'd need him to be my friend."

Handler reached out, picked up a box from the desk and extended it to the now thoroughly thunderstruck convict, who was slowly recovering from the mental strain of the last few moments. "Have a cigar," smiled the warden graciously, with a sweeping bow. "Also permit me to offer you a chair, Mr. Valentine."

"By the way," he went on easily, "are you perfectly comfortable in your cell? If not, I want to know what I can do for you. I'm going to have Smith go to see you every day to do for you anything that you want, provided the rules of the prison permit, and maybe some things they don't."

Valentine, hardly believing what his eyes and ears told him actually to be occurring, dropped bewilderedly into the proffered chair and, taking a gilt banded Havana from the box, stuck it eagerly between his lips.

"Have a light," said the warden, striking a match and extending it to the end of Valentine's cigar.

The secretary stood across the room near a door, eyes staring in his wonder as No. 1289 leaned back luxuriously in his chair, crossed one striped leg over the other and sent fragrant clouds of blue smoke toward the ceiling.

"This'll be a regular Y. M. C. A. before we get through," he gasped. "I think I'll apply for a job as worsted holder for some old mads' sewing society. This prison is getting altogether too genteel to suit me."

When a young lad of good parentage and of sound training and education begins to chafe under the restraint of parental discipline it is time for the parents to exercise the wisdom got only from the lessons taught in the great school of the wide, wide world.

Theories and principles expounded ever so convincingly will not keep the growing boy at home after 7 o'clock in the evening when there is a chance to escape into the streets to meet the "bunch," the alluring, versatile bunch whose plans so often include the annihilation of the Sioux warriors of the Dakota plains who have laid down the tomahawk to take up the agency clay pipe and store clothes.

That is to say, theories and principles merely will not suffice to restrain the impulsive, imaginative, action craving youths unless the parent combines with them enough knowledge of the world to convince the half formed, half trained youthful mind that the mentor has the best interests of the lad in mind, that he has been through it all himself and knows full well the joys and disappointments, the fears and hopes of early days.

And it is the habitually stern, optimistic, unyielding and academic parent who convinces the young lad that he knows nothing of the fascinating temptations of boyhood. The spirit of compromise is allowed to perish by such a parent; the spirit of rebellion grows in the son's heart; a spirit nourished on the decay of the respect and love thrust aside by the father who would not understand.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 27.—Within less than 10 months after the initiation by president Taft of negotiations with the Canadian government, there was laid simultaneously before the American congress at Washington and the Canadian parliament at Ottawa yesterday a reciprocity arrangement which, if approved, will do much, in the opinion of the negotiators, to enlarge trade between the United States and Canada.

There is a notable abatement of duties on a number of American products consumed in Canada. Prominent among these is bituminous coal, which is now exported to Canada to the value of several million dollars annually. There is also a much better opening for American farm machinery and implements.

AMUSEMENTS

"DAVID GARRECK"

Gilmore Brown's career has been a varied and versatile one, but it is generally conceded that in the list of successful productions to his credit, no character assigned him has better suited his personality than that of "David Garreck" in the play of that name, in which he is to appear at the El Paso theater, matinee and night Monday, January 30. In "David Garreck" Mr. Brown has selected a play that is said to be sufficiently strong to stand on its own merits, "but with the play in the hands of a gifted actor and a capable company a brilliant performance is assured," says manager Rich. Seats are on sale at the Crawford box office.

SPECIAL MATINEE.

To accommodate the schools and the teachers, a special matinee of "David Garreck" has been arranged for Monday, starting at 3:15, giving everyone ample time to get there after school closes. The prices are: Lower floor, 75c and $1.00; balcony, 50 cents. Seats are now selling.

After being out 24 hours the jury asked to be dismissed, saying they were hopelessly divided. Judge Jordan refused to consider the request. The defense claims that the jury stood 10 to two for acquittal, and the prosecution claims that there was a similar stand in its favor.
